Community Mobilization Prince Albert has added another level of community investigation to its staff by welcoming a duo of analysts this week.

Tamara Beochler and Markus Winterberger will be crunching numbers and statistics for the organization's Centre of Responsibility (COR).

"We'll be analyzing both statistics and different types of data that come in ... and looking at longer-term broader picture at building healthier communities and building long term solutions to some of the problems here in the city," Beochler said.

"From looking at the past you can predict what's going to happen in the future, so it's compiling reports for decision makers — fact as well as hypothesis."

Community Mobilization Prince Albert is a multi-agency approach at addressing issues and concerns within the community.

vided into two main components, including the Hub, which deals with day-to-day issues, and the COR, which addresses broader underlying issues in the community, with an eye on longer-term community goals and initiatives.

Beochler joins Community Mobilization after spending much of the last decade working in different intelligence analyst roles with the RCMP in Alberta.

With family back home in Prince Albert, she kept hearing updates regarding crime and social issues in her home city.

"I just kept hearing that 'it's getting worse,' and I knew how bad it was when I was here," she said.

When she saw a position open up at Community Mobilization Prince Albert, she figured, "Now that's something worthwhile and something I want to be a part of."

For Winterberger, Prince Albert is relatively new to him, having moved here from Switzerland a couple years ago.

With a law degree from Switzerland, he brings experience analyzing court databases, employing what he refers to as "similar thinking mechanisms."

"I do have a vision for this city and I cannot make that come true just by myself," he said.

"By joining this group I'm joining people that share a big part of the same vision for this city and the changes it would be nice to see happen here."

Beochler will fill the role of tactical analyst and Winterberger will serve as a strategic analyst.
